CAUSES AND COMPONENTS OF VIOLENT EXTREMISM IN THE SAHEL

Laurence-Aïda Ammour

Social Science Approach

Two types of violence coexist:

- Extremist jihadi violence
- Inter-community violence

These two types of violence can occasionally dovetail or overlap

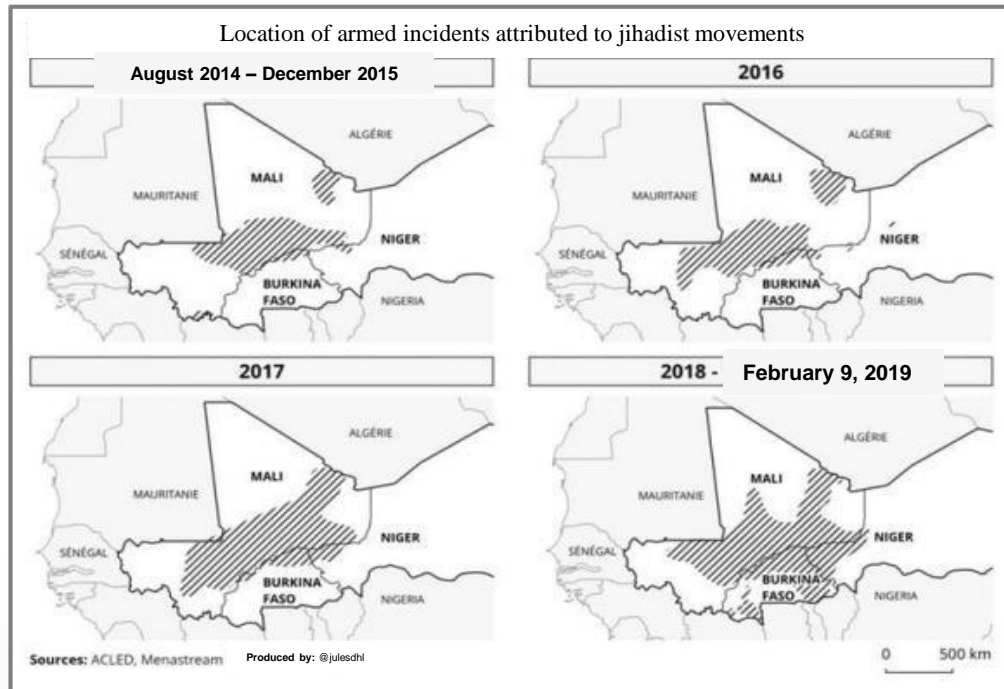

Violent extremism takes advantage of environmental tensions

Violent extremism feeds local community violence

Some extremist groups use identity-focused rhetoric

Inter-community violence is the symptom and result of structural issues

The movements in question are: Al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM), Ansar Dine, Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa (MOJWA), Al-Morabitoun, Group for the Support of Islam and Muslims (JNIM/GSIM), Islamic State in Greater Sahara (ISGS), Ansar ul Islam, Macina Liberation Front (MLF). SUMMARY

Define the nature of the violence: violent extremism and/or extreme violence? To what extent do these two forms of violence overlap in time and space?

Mixed motivations of violent activities and possible intermingling of forms of violence

Peoples' perceptions of threats and insecurity are important to understanding the dynamics and logic behind how the enemy is conceived of, and to implementing dialogue and mediation.

"Full-security" governance imposed by anti-terrorism efforts overlooks the rural, pastoral and agrarian dimensions of violence.

By tolerating and/or encouraging security privatization, governments are delegating a sovereign power to armed civilians and compromising domestic tranquility.

Jihadist groups intentionally politicize and fuel violence between communities by inserting themselves in the social fabric.

"Militiaization" of rural societies exacerbates latent conflicts and provokes new conflicts (cycles of reprisals and violence)
